HAFOD LWYFOG: A History of the House & its Families

Nantgwynant, Gwynedd.

HOUSE HISTORY

1860s -1899: Hafod Lwyfog, so called “because there are elm trees there” says Edward Llwyd. Some of the old poets have called it Hafod Lwyddog (prosperous) and that form is explained on p 294. On the beam which runs under the parlour ceiling are the letter E. LL. E. 1638, but the house is at least eighty years older than that date would lead one to think. The initials are for Ifan Llwyd (or Evan Lloyd) and his wife, and their crest is still preserved on the end wall of the same room.

The green mounds about the house, and the traces of artificial walks and drives around them may still be seen, speak of days when taste and expenses were applied to the beautifying of this residence. The hand of time, the rusticity of many of the past tenants, and its having become exclusively a farm, have very successfully co-operated in obliterating those traces of taste and refinement.

late 1800s: it has been recorded towards the end of the last century the coat of arms of the old family i.e. the three eagles [Owain Gwynedd] and the letters E. LL/E 1638 could be seen clearly carved on the oak beams which run under the parlour ceiling and also on a piece of hard oak set into the wall in one of the upstairs bedroom at the opposite end of the house to where the parlour is situated. (Undated unsigned notes on Hafod Lwyfog)

1908: Hafod Lwyfog is the largest and most important example of local work we shall come across. Its date is cut on the beam over the parlour E LL 1638 E. The plan is far more elaborate than any we have yet seen, but still quite local in character. It consists of an entrance, with kitchen on one side, a chamber or parlour on the other, and a buttery between communicating with the kitchen and a cellar below the parlour. There are at present two wooden staircases, but the original stone stairs went up, as we have seen, from alongside the parlour fireplace. The house consists of four stories: basement or cellar, ground-floor, chamber floor and loft.

The main beams of the floors are moulded, and even the joists have a double bead running along them. The partitions are post-and-panel, the posts being moulded. The parlour has a fireplace from the beginning, but whether there were any in the chambers is not certain, though the chimney breasts are said to be ornamented under the modern papers with plaster-work, similar to that in the parlour representing armorial bearings. There is at present no staircase to the loft, and there is no sign of how it was approached as the stone staircase goes no higher than the first floor. There was a window in the gable-end over the staircase, and also one in the other gable lighting the loft, a similar arrangement to that we have just referred to at Bwlch Gyrhos. The only old window is that looking on to the modern landing at the back. This is of three lights with wooden mullions of splayed form similar to the windows still to be seen at the back of Plas Mawr, Conwy.

The pitch of the roof here is very low, the rafters meeting at about an angle of 100 degrees, the lowest pitch we have yet come across.

1953 May: Hafod Lwyfog (Fig 24, Plate 75) on the site of the birthplace of Sir John Williams, goldsmith (fl 1603-27; Bywgraff Cymr, p983; Gwydir Family, p 87; see no 700 under Plate) and the home of Evan Lloyd (1600-78; Griffith, Pedigrees, p 236 & memorial (ii) in parish church, No 700). It is a two-storeyed, white-washed rubble house with cellar, rebuilt probably in 1638 (Jenkins, Beddgelert, p281, says that the house is at least 80 years older than the inscription. He may be arguing from the older timber-work.), but with re-used material from an earlier building incorporated either at the time or during a latter renovation. The fenestration is irregular and much altered, with one horizontal window at the ground floor, the remainder vertical. On the first floor, at the rear, there is one window with diagonal wooden mullions; another is apparently a former door, being approached by an earthen ramp and provided with a draw-bar slot. The front doorway has a timber lintel with a quarter-round moulding. At each gable end is a tall square chimney with a slate cap. The roof has old rough slates.

The ground floor is divided into two main rooms, the kitchen and the parlour, by an intervening screens passage part of which now forms a pantry. The partitions are post-and-panel with shallow "scratch" mouldings on the post; that to the N has a door with contemporary strap hinges of iron in a "fleur de lys" form. The ceiling has three chamfered main beams and a secondary beam at the N which has stopped quarter-round moulding and carries the inscription ELL / E 1638 (Evan Lloyd edificat, and probably date of erection) The joists in the two S bays are chamfered (Plate 75). Those in the middle have shallow scratch mouldings and are probably older than the house. There is a wide fireplace at the S, and a smaller one at the N over which is a plaster shield of the arms of Owain Gwynedd. Adjacent is a blocked winding stone staircase, which formerly led to the first floor and cellar.

At the N is a cellar, the roof of which is carried on a stop-chamfered beam.

The first floor is divided by two main partitions of post-and-panel construction with a similar intermediate partition. The main ceilings have quarter-round mouldings and the majority of beams have scratch mouldings on sides and soffit. The joists and partitions fit so badly that they must be earlier re-used material.

On the first floor the N fireplace is reduced, the S is blocked; over each is a blank plaster shield.

Condition: of walls and roof good; timber-work at first floor requires attention.

Hall to L, parlour to R with plaster shield over fireplace. Stone spiral stair from L of parlour to first floor; possible recess for stairs/privy cupboards to R. First floor main chambers have shields in relief plasterwork above fireplaces. 4 bay primary roof with pegged oak collar trusses, 2 with segmental doorway heads cut out of the collars. Basement dairy-room partly beneath parlour at the north end. (SOURCE?)

1988: Principal changes in plan introduced during the Renaissance: The change in the main axis of the house – centred on the short axis, which ... coincided with the entry.
vii) The central service-room: in the early block (1576) of Plas Mawr the service-room stands between the hall and parlour and allows a vestibule-entry giving onto all three rooms. The hall was clearly used as a kitchen because only the hall had direct access to the service-room. The plan was repeated at Hafodlwyfog, Beddgelert, (1638). 2000: NMR Wales:

Hafod Llwyfog is a 2-storey, stone-built, central-entry-end-chimney house, rebuilt c1638 with earlier origins indicated by its smoke-blackened roof-trusses and purlins. The former upper cruck trusses appear to have been adapted in-situ to form a first-floor and attic, retaining original purlins throughout its length.

The house is situated facing east, approximately 150 ft above Llyn Gwynant. It is cut into and at right angles to a narrow ridge bank to its rear west-elevation.

Tall, square, gable-end chimneys, formerly with stone slate tiles and coping stones to gable (see 1953 photo).

The present irregular façade seen from photos, was probably (c1638) a symmetrical five window front with the two equal sized windows flanking the entry, as indicated on the plan.

Ground Plan

The main entry, with quarter-round moulding to lintel, leads into a lobby with kitchen on left and parlour to right, all separated by post & panel partitions, with pantry behind the lobby. The post & panel partitions have reed mouldings on the parlour side, back of kitchen side, pantry facing main entrance and around each side of original doorways from lobby. The moulding is the same as on the parlour & lobby/pantry joists.

The kitchen has a central transverse ceiling-beam and half-beam against the south end all with plan chamfer and straight-cut stops to joists. The fireplace has a plain chamfered cambered timber bressummer, and an external drip-mould indicates a former bread oven projection (see plan). A late C18th/ early C19th dog-leg staircase, with boarded cupboard under rises against the pantry partition. It has stick ballasters and moulded hand rail, and at first-floor the landing rail reuses reed-moulded joists.

The parlour has an axial ceiling-beam containing inscription E LL E 1638 on its west side with quarter-round moulding and ogee stop. The joists are reed-moulded on sides and soffit. The fireplace has a timber bressummer with quarter-round moulding, ogee stops and a plaster armorial shield over, formerly with arms of three eagles (see 1953 photo). To the left of the fireplace a winding spiral stone stair rises to first-floor, which was blocked (now open) and superseded (after 1953) by a dog-leg stair to the right side, possibly on site of a former latrine.

The pantry has open turned ballasters above the lobby partition and a window opening in the west wall. The original pantry entry was from the parlour (now blocked) and there are later doorways from lobby and kitchen. A stair rises from the cellar under the parlour into the pantry (now blocked). This stairway has a low door-head which cuts through the parlour partition.

Cellar.

The cellar is contemporary with the 1638 period, having a plain chamfer and straight-cut stop to its transverse ceiling-beam and similar joists. It is slightly smaller than the parlour above, having an external entry and stone stair to the west-elevation.

First-floor.

At first floor there are two cross-partitions with the moulded side facing each heated end room. Doorways have mouldings on both sides and a separate door-head lintel. However part of the partition facing the wooden stairway is moulded. The axial partition is plain and provides an unheated chamber room, formerly with two windows and a landing lit by a 3-light diagonally set, square timber mullion window. This pre-glazing window has recesses in the lintel soffit for diagonally set iron bars. The principal-chamber over the parlour is reached from the winding stone stair, with blocked gable window, through a post & panel partition doorway. The room has a transverse ceiling-beam and half-wall-beam with corbel, each with quarter-round moulding and ogee stop. The joists are reed-moulded on sides and soffit. Also quarter-round moulded to blocked north fireplace with plaster armorial shield over, but no surviving detail. The later stair to right may have been a latrine. There are two windows to the east (one blocked) and a former west doorway once with a draw-bar hole (now a window). The doorway was said to open onto the adjacent bank (RCAHMW Caernarfon Inventory). A doorway in the cross-partition gives access to the unheated chamber.

The south end chamber fireplace probably had a quarter-round moulding, but the bressummer has been eroded and the opening narrowed. It has a plain plaster armorial shield over fireplace with no surviving detail. The ceiling-beams and joists are plain chamfered and there is a reed moulded frame to closet on left and possible latrine to right with blocked gable window. The room is lit by a window from each side.

Roof Trusses.

There are four trusses of two types, both now collar trusses with two side purlins and former diagonally set ridge. The rafters have been recently replaced and the roof re-slatted. These trusses may have been formerly upper-crucks that have been cut-back with tie-beams removed when the attic floor was inserted.

Trusses 2 and 3 (see drawings) are chamfered and stopped at cranked chamfered collars (cut back arch in collar) and cut back raking struts (decorated?). There is also a mortise in the truss with a single peg just below each raking strut. Secondary studs mortised into the collar form a passage through the truss partition.

Trusses 1 and 4 (see drawing) have chamfered cambered collars with secondary raking struts and mortises with four pegs either for an earlier collar or for vertical studs. These trusses show an interesting arrangement of carpenters centring marks and setting out lines with small pegs for alignment? The trusses have scored lines marking the position of purlins as do some of the peg holes.

Trusses 2 & 3, being chamfered & stopped at cranked collar, possibly with decorated raking struts extending to a low tie-beam are likely to be the central trusses of a former 3-bay hall/chamber, while the plainer collar and strut-trusses define end-bays.

Possible Development.

1. The early development before 1638 is uncertain. However the cut-back upper-cruck trusses and mullion window pre-date this period. The different forms of trusses indicated an earlier 3-bay first-floor chamber/hall of the C16th, possibly heated by a brazier.

2. The present building was rebuilt as 2-storeys with attic and given a symmetrical front c1638 by Evan Lloyd, a suitable residence for his position as High Sheriff. This is primarily what survives today, with gable-end fireplace, post & panel partitions, quarter-round details, cellar and stone stairs. Upper cruck tie-beams removed and attic formed.

3. In the late C18th the kitchen window was enlarged, first-floor windows were blocked and a kitchen stair inserted.

4. Mid C20th adjustments, blocking parlour stone stair and inserting dog-leg stair to right of probable latrine.

2005: DENDROCHRONOLOGY at Hafod Lwyfog.

Three timbers from roof trusses in Hafod Lwyfog (a collar and two principal rafters have been dated suggesting felling of the timber for construction of the roof in the date range 1541-1550.

Samples were taken from timbers forming the roof trusses (samples 01-02, 04-05), or from in situ joists or fragments of joists held in store (samples 03, 06-09) [Table 1, Figure 4] Results from the joists were disappointing with none dating. Three of the four samples from roof timbers (01, 04 and 05) cross-matched with each other and timbers from Gwastad Annas [Table 2]. Absolute dating of two of the sampled principal rafters indicates felling of the parent tree in the felling date range AD 1527-62. Dating of a collar (01) allows this to be refined to AD 1541-50.

(Nigel Nayling, University of Lampeter Dendrochronology Report 2005)

The house lies N-S on ground sloping up to the south and with chimneys in both gables. It is situated in a hollow on the steep south side of the Gwynant valley at 150m above O.D. a little way south of the stepped trackway from Nantgwynant to Dolwyddelan.

HISTORY OF THE HOLDING:

The township of Nanhwynan, in the commote of Is Gwyrfa in the south of the cantref of Arfon, in medieval Gwynedd, was an area of scattered farmsteads, most extending from the valley-bottom river to the watershed along the surrounding mountain ridges.

The valley served, from an early period, as a mountain redoubt, containing "lands" with fixed boundaries for the temporary maintenance of stock, and was a strong point supported by bond gafaelion, at least by the twelfth century. After the need for places of retreat had for various reasons ceased to exist, the "lands" became summer grazings for lowland cattle,

Although Nanhwynan was surrounded by high mountains, the valley bottom was only some few hundred feet above sea-level. As soon as the monks gave up trying to work so large a district on their own as a true monastic grange, if indeed they ever managed to do so, the tenants that they introduced on long leases would have begun to clear the trees covering the flat alluvial land beside the river and lakes, and the stones from the slopes just above, thus creating for themselves permanent holdings. ... In the mountains of Gwynedd, the type of land tenure used was the gafael, a piece of land with a fixed boundary round it.

(C A Gresham, 1983, The Aberconwy Charter; further consideration, BBCS XXV, p 335).

Around 1200, probably soon after Llywelyn ab Iorwerth (Prince Llywelyn the Great) gained control of Dinas Emrys and the township of Nanhwynan (now Nantgwynant), he granted the whole township as a grange to the Cistercian Abbey of Aberconwy. The separate boundaries of each are not noted, but they were plainly natural features for the most part, such as rivers and mountain ridges.

The later sites of Hafod Rhisgl and Wenallt, along with Hafog Lwyfog, were probably part of the Bryn Gwynein holding described in the grant charter of circa 1199. Over the following centuries the Cistercians began to lease out their holdings, and this probably also occurred in Nanhwynan. (C A Gresham “The Aberconwy Charter”, 1939, Arch. Camb., pp 150-7)

1508: Maredudd ab Ieuan ap Robert (c1460-1525)

In 1506 Maredudd ab Ieuan ap Robert (c1470-1525) and his oldest son John Wynn ap Maredudd (c1492-1559) were appointed, by Abbot Dafydd ap Owain, stewards for life of the Nanhwynan lands and the other Caernarfonshire lands of the Aberconwy monastery, joining Maurice ap Rhys (Morris Gethin) of Plas Iolyn who had been appointed steward in Hiraethog in 1501. (R W Hays, The History of the Abbey of Aberconway, 1963, pp174-75; C A Gresham, 1983, The Aberconwy Charter; further consideration, BBCS XXV, p 337).

In 1508 Maredudd ab Ieuan ap Robert (the purchaser of Gwydir and ancestor to the Wynn family of Gwydir) obtained from Dafydd, the abbot of Aberconwy the leases, of the holdings in Nanhwynan of Bwlch Murchan, Gwastadannas, Hafod Tandreg, Llyndy, Hafod-y-porth, Cwmdyli, Wernlasdeg and Glasdraian.

In 1590 John Wynn recovered control of these land holdings and Hafod Nether and Dinas Moch. Bryn Gwynein was not named. (UWB, Baron Hill Ms 3206; C A Gresham, 1983, The Aberconwy Charter; further consideration, BBCS XXV, p 337).

At some time before this exchange and also before Maredudd's death at Gwydir in 1525, the holding named as Bryn Gwynein in the 1200 charter was divided to form the holdings of Havod Kyske (Hafod rhisgl) [Bark summer dwelling / summer dwelling by the stepped land] and Havod Llwywoc (Hafod lwyfog) which are both named in the Ministers' Accounts of 1536, where they were recorded as being leased to Maredudd's son, John Wyn ap Maredudd for £2-6-8d & £1-6-8d respectively. (PRO ms Ministers' Accounts Henry VIII 4972).

Maredudd ap Ieuan ap Robert's will has not survived, but it appears from later documents that at his death in 1525 the monastic lease of much of Nantgwynant passed to his eldest son, John Wyn ap Maredudd. Around 1700 Bishop Humphrey Humphreys noted in a manuscript of Sir John Wynn's History of the Gwydir Family, now lost, concerning "Maredudd Wynn ab Ifan ab Rhobert of Gesail Gyfarch in the township of Penyfed in Eifionydd" who died aged about 65 years, on 18th May, 1525: "that at his death by his will dated 4th May 1525 he left his estate to certain Trustees to be divided among his four sons, John Wyn, Rees Wyn, Humphrey Wyn and Kadwalader. To John Wynne, Gwyder and his lands in Nanconway Dolwyddelan and Llanfrothen; (Rees dy'd [c1531] before ye partition); to Humphrey, Gesail gyfarch etc; etc; Cadwaladr (who was several times member of parliament), Wenallt etc." (J. Wynn, The History of the Gwydir Family, Ed. Askew Roberts (1878), p. 85).

In 1525 Humphrey Wynn, one of his two sons by the daughter of Morus ap John ap Maredudd of Clenennau, inherited Gesail Gyfarch, and he further consolidated the holding and married the heiress of Cwm Bowydd, Ffestiniog. He was still living at Y Gesailgyfarch in 1570. (J Gwynfor Jones, The Wynn Estate of Gwydir: Aspects of its Growth and Development c1500-1580, NLW Journal, XXII p 144)

1559: death of John Wyn ap Maredudd, who in 1525 had inherited most of Nant Gwynant. His son Morus Wynn inherited either the Crown lease, or if already purchased from the Crown, the actual farm holdings. Morus Wynn died in 1580 and his son (Sir) John Wynn of Gwydir inherited.

In 1583 Humphrey Wynn's son John Wynn ap Humphrey of Gesail Gyfarch made an entail listing his lands. One of his trustees is his brother Evan Lloyd, tenant of Hafod Llwyfog. (C A Gresham, 1973, Eifionydd, p 90; UWB Henblas ms 1380)

In 1593 William Maurice of Clenennau three times tried to attack John Wynn and his adult son Robert. In 1594 in another attack, John Wynn retreated into the house but his wife at the door was harassed and died. (C A Gresham, 1973, Eifionydd, p 91) John Wynn then moved to Cwm Bowydd, Ffestiniog, where he died before 1623.

1636: a deed was drawn up by (his son) John Wynn (died 1637) of Gesail Gyfarch & other local landowners with Richard Lewis of Kemin fanydd (Cennin fynydd). (C A Gresham, Eifionydd, 1973, p 204)

John Wyn ap Maredudd, eldest son of Maredudd was born c1493, inherited in 1525 and died in 1559. He continued to consolidate the estate of Gwydir, and adopted the surname Wynn. On 30 January 1535, John Wynne ap Maredudd was one of the commissioners for the diocese of St Asaph appointed by Henry VIII to compile a record of the financial conditions of churches and monasteries - the "Valor Ecclesiasticus". In 1536 John Wynne ap Maredudd was steward of the Aberconway abbey's possessions in Caernarfonshire; his salary was £2 13s 4d and he was paid an additional 16s 8d for acting as receiver in his territory. Aberconway Abbey was dissolved by 25 March 1537. (R W Hays, The History of the Abbey of Aberconway, 1963, p 158, 159, 174 & 178)

In the 1536 Ministers' Accounts preceding the dissolution of the Monasteries, the property Bryn Gwynein is not named. In its place Havod Llwyvoc (Hafod Llwyfog) and Havod Kyske (Hafod Rhisgl) are named. All the Nanhwynan holdings were leased out by the Crown:

John Wyn ap Maredudd leased Gwastadannas, Bwlch murchan, Hafod y llan, Hafod Tandreg, Llyndy & Hafod y Porth (£10 1s 8d) plus Hafod Kyske (£2 6s 8d) & Hafod Lwyfog (£1 6s 8d).

Robert ap Howel ap Rhys leased Wernlasdeg (£2 13 4d) & Hafod Nether (£1 10s) No tenants' names are given for Comyenly, Crafflaene, Glastreane or for one unnamed holding. (PRO Ministers' Account, Henry VIII, 4972) Hafod Nether and Dinas Moch are not named although they were part of the grange of Nanhwynan.

1537: At the dissolution of the monasteries the greater part of the Cistercian Aberconwy grange of Nanhwynan came into the possession of the Wynn family of Gwydir (John Ballinger, Calendar of Wynn (of Gwydir) Papers. 1515-1690 (1926), nos. 1094, 1483, 1592; U.C.N.W. Baron Hill MS 3206; J Gwynfor Jones, The Wynn Estate of Gwydir c. 1500-1580, pp. 142,143,144; C.A. Gresham, 'The Parish of Beddgelert', TCHS 30, (1969), p 24).

“At the Dissolution of the Monasteries when the larger blocks of land ceased to be monastic granges they had not only to be brought into some form of parochial system within the diocese, but also merged with the civil administration of the counties. For this purpose they were made into manors with courts and bailiffs to administer them and collect rates. The Manor of Nanhwynan lasted well into the nineteenth century, and a surviving court book covering the years 1747-1827 is preserved in the National Library of Wales. (NLW ms 7854A; C A Gresham, 1983, The Aberconwy Charter; further consideration, BBCS XXV, p 337).

Britain became Protestant and was no longer Roman Catholic; the local effects of the Reformation are not known, but the Wynn family appear to have adapted as necessary in order to continue to improve their status politically and socially in the county.

John Wyn ap Maredudd was High Sheriff of Caernarfonshire in 1545 and 1557, achieved considerable prominence in local government and was elected to Parliament.

In February 1547 Edward VI, aged 9 years, succeeded King Henry VIII.

In 1553 Queen Mary succeeded King Edward VI and returned Britain to Roman Catholicism.

In 1558, on 17 November, Queen Elizabeth succeeded Queen Mary, and Britain again became protestant. She died on 24th March 1603.

Owner of the Wynn estate: Morus Wynn was the eldest son of John Wyn. He was born in 1520, inherited in 1559 and died in 1580. In 1559 when John Wyn ap Maredudd died, Morus Wynn, his eldest son and heir succeeded to much of the Gwydir estate, including Gwastadannas, Hafod y Porth and Llyndy in Nantgwynant. Morus Wynn leased or bought Meillionen & Cae'r ychen.

Morus's brother Gryffudd Wynn inherited Hafod y llan & he or his brother Robert Wynn inherited Bwlch murchan. At their brother, Dr John Gwynne's, death in 1574 John's estate went to Robert Wynn who built Plas Mawr, Conway around 1576, & who died in 1598. Robert Wynn assigned Bwlch murchan to Owen Wynn of Caemilwr, who died in 1590.

Hafod Lwyfog is not listed in John Wyn ap Maredudd's will. It may have been left to Maredudd's son Humffrey Wynn of Gesail Gyfarch as his descendant Evan Lloyd later lived there.

By 1591 Evan Lloyd, son of Humphrey Wynn ap Maredudd, a brother of John Wyn ap Maredudd, was living at Hafod Lwyfog.

1592 May 1: Long drawn out litigation relating to dispute between Jonett Thomas, with her seven sons and three daughters to the Council ... being her Majestes customary tenants of one tenement called Tuthin havod yrrisk ... and John Wynne Esquire, who endeavours to deprive her of her tenement in the county of Caernarvon, parcel of the late dissolved monastery of Conway. (PRO SP 12/185/96 c.1585-91 [c1589])

Interrogation 3. What weapons or arms did you bring with you or did you see there prepared in readiness? Who provided them & for what purpose? Who else was there, what are their names, where did they dwell, how far were their homes? Who persuaded you to gather, for what purpose?

Witness F. Howell ap Ievan ap William of parish of Bethgelert, aged 40 years or thereabouts, borrowed two staves the night before of Jevan Lloid ap Humffrey (Hafod Llwyfog?) and that he borrowed it of purpose to withstand the complainant coming to the premises.

Witness H. Harry ap David of parish of Llanrych Wyn, aged 27 years or thereabouts. He went to Rees ap Ievan to fetch the same gun, bows and arrows, and did send David ap Ievan to fetch the rest that were had there, and that his brother Rowland went to fetch and borrow other weapons to the house of Ievan Lloyd ap Humffrey, and said that he borrowed the same to defend the possession of his mother house and lands against John Wyn Esquire and his friends.

Interrogation 5. Did you and some others carry up and down the grounds "bowes, arowes, gwns, pitchforks, weilsh hookes, and forrest bills and diverse unlawfull weapons" to defend the possessions of the premises against the said complainants? How many weapons did you see carried, by whom? Were they your own, or whose were they? Declare the truth at large – did you or others affirm that if the complainant John Wyn or any for him had come thither with any purpose and by strength to take or get possession of the premises that then your company would have "shotte a pace (piece) at him"? Did you hear or see any peace discharged, by whom?

Witness F. He saw a bow and arrows laid down upon some part of the premises called Bryn gwynen, but who brought them thither he knoweth not. He heard a calliver discharged upon the premises. He heard some of the company affirm that they would keep the complainant out of the premises. (PRO STAC 7/15/61)

The biting effects of inflation and constant financial demands of the Stuarts placed increasing burdens and caused further hardship since the gentry were largely dependent on borrowed money and the greed of the userer. ... Acquiring loans at heavy interest rates incurred heavy debts that affected other aspects of social and economic life generally within the family.

Sir John Salusbury, even when his estate appeared financially at its strongest in 1607 negotiated with Sir Thomas Myddleton for a loan of £1,000 to pay his debts. Fortunes of the collateral family at Bachymbyd however flourished. John Salusbury had followed the earl of Essex in 1601 and since he had lived beyond his means was forced to sell part of his land. He mortgaged Bachymbyd to JOHN WILLIAMS, a wealthy London goldsmith and native of Hafod Lwyfog near Beddgelert for £3,000. His brother William Salusbury (Blue stocking) was a shrewd business man. He inherited in 1611, re-acquired the alienated lands and added substantially to them.

1617 June 13: Warrant to apprehend & attach John ap Jeuvan Lloyd ap Gryffiths Appended statement by Ryce Johns, constable of the manor of Nanhoyan that he had often searched for William John ap Jevan Lloyd, but had never caught him. Before John Wynne of Gwydir. (GAS, XQS/1617/45)

“The years of famine between 1621 and 1623, and, later, from 1629 to 1631 had adverse economic and social effects on the county of Caernarvonshire. A series of bad harvests led to a policy of imposing a severe limitation on the quantity of malt that could be used for brewing. Provisions for the alleviation of social despair were outlined by the Privy Council in 1622; all the unnecessary alehouses were to be suppressed, since a considerable quantity of barley was being used to brew strong ales; now it was to be used to relieve the poor. (C. S. P. D. CXXXIII, 455)

In the western part of the county a survey had “found the countrey exceedinge poor, past beleefe, because the cattel whereon the live, for the foure last yeares bare no price and bread corne ys exceedinge deare whereof they have greate scaritie”. These communities, “having neither money nor sale for the produce of the county”, when the harvest failed were reduced to total misery and wretchedness. (C. S. P. D., CXLII, 4; NLW, CWP no 1064, Add MS 466) ...

Late in 1622 complaints were voiced that corn was scarce in the county, and enquiries were made to discover whether or not it could be imported from Germany. (NLW, CWP nos 1060, 1078) The eastern commotes of Caernarvonshire were in dire need, and since the price of cattle had dropped a sharp increase had taken place in the price of bread corn. (C A J Skeel, The Cattle Trade between England and Wales from the Fifteenth to the Nineteenth Centuries, in Trans. Royal Historical Society, 1926, 135-58) Sir John Wynn complained of the unseasonableness of the weather had begged for a loan of £500 from Sir Thomas Myddelton. His rents had fallen considerably because his tenements for the most part lay in remote, mountainous country where no corn would grow, and where, for two years prior to 1623, neither cattle, wool, sheep nor butter yielded a reasonable price. Wynn recorded that many had died of starvation, while others “bear the impression of hunger in their faces”. (NLW, CWP nos 1075, 1085, 1152, 1184, 1205) (J Gwynfor Jones, Caernarvonshire Administration: The Activities of the Justices of the Peace, 1603-1660, Welsh History Review, 1970-71. p 144-5)

In 1610 Sir John Williams, another descendant of Maredudd ab Ieuan ap Robert, and goldsmith to King James the First, gave a silver chalice to Beddgelert parish church.

It was at Hafod Lwyfog, we are told, (Evans, History of North Wales) that Sir John Williams, the goldsmith, was born. His father was William, son of John Coetmor, the 23rd offspring of Meredith ab Ievan ab Robert, Gesailgyfarch. John William’s grandfather was, therefore, a brother to Cadwaladr Wynn, Wenallt. How William Coetmor came to reside at Hafod Lwyfog we do not know; but we know that Nant Gwynen belonged to his uncle, Cadwaladr. Evan Lloyd, above mentioned, was a direct descendant of Humphrey, Cadwaladr Wynn and John Coetmor’s brother.

Sir John Williams went up to London when quite a young man, to try his fortunes in the Metropolis, and accumulated a considerable fortune at an early age. Though he had left Nant Gwynen, he had drunk deeply of its spirit, and neither Metropolis life nor the making of money was able to take that spirit out of him. “He was a distinguished collecting antiquary”, and is known in English literature as the man who furnished Michael Drayton, the poet, with such an abundance of fact and fiction about Wales and with the posthumous papers of Leland. This fact explains Bishop Nicholson’s surprise that Drayton’s Polyolbion, that “strange herculean” work, “should contain a much truer account of this kingdom and the dominion of Wales than could well be expected from the pen of a poet”. The reader will find a reference to Sir John Williams in a letter from Bagford/Bragfford to Hearne, prefixed to the first volume of Leland’s Collectanea. (See History of Gwydir Family, p 87)

His work on Nant Gwynen Chapel, and his gift of a communion service to the Church of Bedd Gelert, bespeak his religious tendencies; and his bequeathment of his large collection of books and manuscripts to the library of Jesus College, Oxford, (there is no record of this in Oxford) shows that he was fully aware of the value of literary productions, which he was unwilling to leave to the mercy of chance and ignorance. He had three sons, all of whom became titled gentlemen. Sir John Williams, Bart., inherited his father’s title, and lived in the Isle of Thanet; Sir Edmund Williams, Bart., lived at Marne Hall, Dorsetshire, and was created Baronet in April 1642; while Sir Morris Williams was Physician to the Queen. The assertion (by Evans, History of North Wales) that he retired to his native place, to close his life in religious quietude, has not been proved. The parish contains neither a record nor a word of tradition about his residence here after his retirement, and it is very probable that he came only periodically to visit his relations at Nant Gwynen, and that he breathed his last elsewhere. He was certainly not buried within the parish, or else such a man would have had a tablet put to his memory. (D E Jenkins, 1899, Beddgelert, its Facts, Fairies & Folklore, p 281-84)

JOHN WILLIAMS ? of Dolwyddelan; apprenticed 1584; 1608 founded free school in Llanwrst; in 1615 taking mortgage on Bachembyd – Salusbury of Rug – as J W was very a rich money lender; by 1623 he was no longer His Majesties goldsmith.

1678: In the Chancery suit it was alleged that the charity (for building Llanwrst almshouses) had been provided, not by Sir John Wynn (as the draft statute implied) but by his kinsman John Williams of Hafod Lwyfog, Nanhwynan, a successful London goldsmith residing in Cheapside, who had close connections with Dolwyddelan. (J Gwynfor Jones, The Wynn Family of Gwydir, 1995, p 157; NLW MS 470E.2796)

Evan Lloyd ap Humphrey Wynn ap Maredudd’s descendent, also called Evan Lloyd, is commemorated with his wife in the carving E LL 1638 in the parlour ceiling beam. Partly rebuilt / refitted in c1638.

It was said, unfortunately without giving any source, that the building was at least 80 years older than that date [i.e. built pre 1558, cf dendrochronology results of 1550s].

Evan Llwyd (son of John Lloyd who was a son of Evan Llwyd the brother to John Coetmor and son of Meredydd ap Ieuan ab Rhobert) made his home at Hafod Lwyfog a long time previous to 1610. He married Catrin, daughter of William Wyn ap William from Cochwillan and the widow of John Wyn ap Humphrey from Gesail gyfarch, Penmorfa.

They had one son, John Llwyd Esq, but there is no record whom he married.

John Llwyd’s son was Ifan Llwyd Esq., who married Catherine, daughter of Gruffydd Wyn Esq of Benyberth, Lleyn.

His heirs were his son William Lloyd and his daughter Lowri who became the second wife of the bard Elis Wynne of Lasynys, Harlech.

(undated unsigned leaflet on Hafod Lwyfog)

The Evan Lloyd who lived at Hafod Lwyfog in 1638 was the son of John Lloyd, who was the son of Evan Lloyd, the son of Meredith. He was a well-built man, of great courage and strong common sense, and the friend of the poor and oppressed. During the Civil War, he took the side of the Royalists, and stood up for Charles as an uncompromising admirer, though we have no evidence of his having taken any active part in the struggle, apart from the following anecdote. One day a batch of Cromwell's men came by, and, feeling hungry, they turned in to Hafod Lwyfog. Evan Lloyd was out at the time, but was soon acquainted with the fact that they had come, and that they were making free with his house and food. They had placed their arms on a large table near the door, so he noiselessly picked them up, carried them out, and threw them down the hill below the house. He then returned to the house, and, with his bare clenched fists, began to attack the intruders, and drove them out with a rush through the door. Tradition is silent as to any consequences, and the probability is that when the soldiers got a moment to reflect upon the incident, they admired his pluck too much to do anything more than laugh at it with good humour. (D E Jenkins, Beddgelert Its Facts Fairies & Folklore, p 281-84)

1662: The 1662 Hearth Tax for Nanhwynen Evan Lloyd, probably of Hafod Lwyfog. (GAS, Hearth Tax, Is Gwyrfaï, Nanhwynen)

He was County Sheriff in the year 1670-71, and ten years later his son William enjoyed the same honour. During the last renovation of Bedd Gelert Church, some of the workmen, unknown to the vicar, opened Evan Lloyd's grave for curiosity's sake. His grave had been worked with stones and mortar, was seven feet long, and nearly six feet deep. His bones were in a fair state of preservation, though the skull was partly decayed. What remained of his coffin was mahogany. He died in 1678, in his sixty-seventh year of his age. (D E Jenkins, Beddgelert Its Facts Fairies & Folklore, p 281-84)

1678 Feb 5: buried Evan Lloyd Esq (NLW, Beddgelert Bishops Transcripts)
1678 Old oak tablet on wall in St Mary Church, Beddgelert; crest of family with
"Infra jacet corpus Evani Lloyd, de Hafodlwyfog, Armigeri. Qui inhumatus fuit Paterno et Avito tumulo sexto, die Idus Maias AD 1678. Anas aetai 78" (May 6)
(D E Jenkins, 1899, Beddgelert, its Facts, Fairies & Folklore, p 118)

The oak tablet included his coat of arms: three eagle flanking each other and spreading their wings – the lineage of Owain Gwynedd.

In 1823-25 Rev G J Freeman LLB., in his rare volume "Sketches in Wales – the record of three tours in Wales in 1823, 1824 and 1825 noted that the remembrance tablet to Ifan Llwyd was at that time fixed above the communion table in the church. (Undated unsigned notes on Hafod Lwyfog)

I saw Evan Lloyd's coffin, a large mahogany one, very long with V chest, when the church (Beddgelert) was restored in 1880/1. (Hawarden Record Office, D/GA/1059: C S Mainwaring. Smallest notebook, p 4)

All who are interested in Welsh literature are familiar with the name of Elis Wynn, the author of Bardd Cwsg – a work which is at present receiving great attention in Wales, and may be read, by the English reader, in Mr R Gwyneddon Davies's admirable prize translation. Elis Wynn married the granddaughter of Evan Lloyd, his wife, Lowry, being the second daughter of William Lloyd.

1990s Mr Jerry Smith (ex teacher), Peter Garden's partner and Val Clark lived there and ran the Camp site. Major repairs were undertaken.

Two men looking after the Campsite lived in the house. (W O Williams, Hafod Rhisgl, pers com 2008 & others)

2000s: Emily Garden runs the camp site ?and lives in Hafod Lwyfog.

There were two houses, with a family in each before living memory; one was bigger and much older than the other; it was therefore Belan Wen Fawr, and the other Belan Wen fach. It was impossible to say who lived in which. (UWB, ms 33,242, 1903 essay)

It is said that the Romans had somewhere to melt copper here. Yellow ore rock was carried from Cwm Nhadog (Dolwyddelan) on their backs.

There used to be a kiln here in the old times where they dried the grain belonging to the farmers of Nant Gwynant.

It is said that Madog ab Owain Gwynedd had been at Nant Gwynant and that he used to go fishing in the lake; perhaps Belan Wen was his home.

Several families have lived here:

Einion, an interesting character, used to live here.

Also Sion of the black violin; there used to be lots of calls for his services at noson llawen and Saints' Days.

Abstract of an assignment of 3 terms of years by 1., with the consent of 2 and the nomination of 3., to 4., in trust for 3, in messuages called Havod Lwyddog, otherwise Havod Lwyfog, Belan wen in township of Nanhwynen, parish of Bethgelert.

Recites that in 1751 Humphrey Meredith limited premises to William Williams for 500 years for the uses therein specified that by the marriage settlement of Meyrick Meredith in 1756 part of the premises were conveyed to trustees for 200 years for the uses therein specified, that Meyrick Meredith mortgaged part of the premises (demise for 100 years) to secure £250, that Humphrey Meredith by his will charged premises with £2,000, that by various assignments the 3 terms of years and the charge became vested in Charles Hawker in trust for Charles Potts, that 1. is the executor of the executor of Charles Hawker and 2 is the surviving executor of Charles Potts, that all the moneys secured on the premises have long since been paid to Charles Potts, that by various assurances in the law the premises became vested in Anna Maria Wynne, who devised the same to 3. in trust to sell. (Rumsey Williams. Vol 1, p 216)

On land belonging to Hafod Lwyfog stands this cottage, about 100 yards or more from the road leading to Penygwryd on a hillock nearly opposite the top end of Llyn Gwynant. I fail to find an account of anybody living here except Rees Williams, his wife Mary and their children. They were here from 1840-1870. I believe that Mary Williams and one of her daughters lived here until 1874 or 78. After further searching I found that Mary Williams was here in 1884. (UWB, ms 33242, 1903 essay)
