BRYN YR ODYN (Bryn ‘Rodyn)

Maentwrog, Merioneth (Gwynedd)

Researched by Nan Griffiths and Gwenda Paul.
Revised 22 March 2013

NGR - SH 707 408. Bryn yr Odyn, Cwm Cynfal, Ffestiniog, Gwynedd. LL41 4RA
Ffestiniog Parish, sometimes included in Trawsfynydd or in Maentwrog Parishes.

Bryn yr Odyn means the hill of the (lime) kiln and is an ancient Snowdonia type house situated in Cwm Cynfal, a secluded valley near Llan Ffestiniog. Cwm Cynfal is remarkable for the survival of many place names recorded in the mediaeval Welsh tales (written c.1060) known today as The Mabinogi.

Bryn yr Odyn is situated in a wide, secluded valley south of Llan Ffestiniog. The house is entered by means of a cross passage flanked by post and panel partitions on each side. The passage divides the ground floor into two parts: the parlour or service room on one side and the hall with its large ingle-nook and winding stone stairs on the other. There is an attic above the first floor and a more recent two storey kitchen wing has been added on the north side. The house would have been built for a prosperous yeoman farmer who made a good living raising and exporting cattle to the markets of England

Dating Bryn yr Odyn by the North Wales Dendrochronology Project.

Dendrochronology Summary

Samples were taken from the roof of the rear (north) wing and the main roof, the cross-passage screens, the ground floor ceilings of the main range and a fireplace lintel in the main ground floor room. The fireplace lintel was the earliest timber dated – it had 36 sapwood rings, possibly including the outermost ring, although this is uncertain, its felling date is therefore given as c1503. Eleven timbers, including roof timbers from the main range and some north wing roof timbers, two from the cross passage screens, two ceiling timbers from the main range, and a rear range mantel beam, were felled over a period from winter 1555/56 to summer 1557, and appear to represent a single phase of construction, most likely in 1557. The north (rear) range roof appears to have been reconstructed using some original purlins and a principal rafter with an outer heartwood ring formed in 1586, giving a likely felling date after 1597, which may be of the same date as the axial beam felled in summer 1640. (Dendrochronology Report by Oxford Dendrochronology Laboratory 2010; Report updated January 2011.)

House Description

A substantial house of Snowdonian type with voussoir-headed doorways and a screened cross-passage. The post-and-panel partitions originally had twin doorways into the outer rooms and a large central doorway into the hall. The house is fully storeyed with a habitable attic. Structural evidence suggests that the single-storey north-west kitchen wing has been added. Tree-ring dating showed that the principal rafters had a felling date of after 1597 but the purlins were contemporary or nearly so with the main house, and presumably reused. The early felling date for the fireplace beam indicates further reuse. The collar-beam trusses of the main range were not sampled because of potential bat disturbance.

The above conveyances point to how frequently the property has changed hands especially at the end of the 20th century.

Conclusion

Bryn yr Odyn was built in the 16th century as the home of a prosperous Welsh farmer who bred and exported Welsh Black cattle to the markets of England. The property remained in the ownership of the same family for many generations. Howell Hughes was a cultured gentleman who corresponded with the Puritan mystic and author Morgan Llwyd (1619 – 1659) of Cynfal.

However, following the contemporary fashion of accumulating land and wealth by means of intermarriage among the gentry it became the property of the wealthy Sir Thomas Kyffin of Maenan.

By the 1800 it seems the owners no longer lived in the property and it was let to local tenant farmers and according to the 1881 Census was divided into two homes. The large families and their servants played an important part in the religious and social life of Cwm Cynfal.

In the early part of the 20th century the property remained in local hands but by 1969 the land was reduced to 56 acres. In 1975 it was sold to a Norwich family, reflecting the common trend of internal migration to rural Wales.

2012 Bryn yr Odyn is in the process of being restored and conserved.
